Clinton River Rookery Preserve Rochester Hills, MI

Oakland Land Conservancy's 24-acre Clinton River Rookery Preserve in Rochester Hills protects both banks along one mile of the Clinton River. The preserve consists of mature floodplain forest and wetlands and features an active Great Blue Heron rookery. The preserve is surrounded by three subdivisions: Rookery Woods, Quail Ridge and Butler Ridge (under construction). Preservation of a natural area so closely surrounded by residential development presents special management challenges.

One very important challenge — clear identification of the boundaries of the preserve — has been solved by Spalding Dedecker Associates, Inc. (SDA). This winter, SDA, led by Survey and Mapping Department Manager and Vice President George Platz, made a very generous donation of their services by surveying the boundaries of the Clinton River Rookery Preserve and marking the survey points for the Conservancy to install preserve signs.

The Conservancy regularly monitors the preserve for disturbances and encroachment. The Conservancy, in partnership with Clinton River Watershed Council and Trout Unlimited has launched a program to restore native ecosystems where they have been disturbed. According to Executive Director Donna Folland, “a clearly marked boundary identifying the location of the protected area is essential to both monitoring and restoration. We need to be able to stop encroachment into the protected area and also know how far to extend our restoration work. Spalding DeDecker’s gift is the first step in our success at restoration and we are grateful for their partnership and generosity.”

The mission of the Oakland Land Conservancy is to preserve, protect, and connect the natural areas and open spaces in Oakland County to enhance the quality of life. The Conservancy works in Oakland County and southern Lapeer County to protect water quality, wildlife habitat, and recreational opportunities by owning nature preserves, holding
